Summary

At its forty-first session, the Commission for Social Development considered two topics under its agenda and multi-year programme of work, namely, the priority theme, "National and international cooperation for social development", and the review of relevant United Nations plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups.

Under the priority theme, the Commission considered five specific topics: (a) sharing of experiences and practices in social development; (b) forging partnerships for social development; (c) social responsibility of the private sector; (d) impact of employment strategies on social development; and (e) policies and role of international financial institutions and their effect on national social development strategies.

In respect of the priority theme, the Commission adopted a resolution in which it recommended the endorsement of its agreed conclusions thereon by the Economic and Social Council. In these conclusions, the Commission, inter alia, stresses that national and international cooperation for social development should aim at solidarity, equality within and among countries, social justice, good governance at all levels, tolerance and full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It recognizes that globalization offers both opportunities and challenges and that it should be fully inclusive and equitable. Renewed and effective partnerships between developed countries and developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition, and among all relevant actors, are required to achieve the internationally agreed social development objectives and commitments. The Commission also recognizes that increased and more effective official development assistance and other resources will be required for developing countries to achieve these goals and objectives. The responsibility of the private sector at the national and international levels is underlined. In this context, the Commission emphasizes the need to take concrete actions within the United Nations system and through the participation of all relevant stakeholders on corporate responsibility and accountability. It calls upon all relevant development partners to give adequate attention to productive and sustainable employment in their development policies. It stresses the necessity of ensuring the effective involvement of developing countries in the international economic decision-making process, and invites the international financial institutions to strengthen further their efforts to ensure that an improved social outcome is incorporated into their programmes of assistance. Finally, the Commission invites the General Assembly and the Council to continue to include consideration of the integration of economic and social policies as one of the thematic areas to be addressed in future debates.

Also under the priority theme, the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft resolution entitled "National and international cooperation for social development: implementation of the social objectives of the New Partnership for Africa's Development", in which the Council would, inter alia, welcome the New Partnership for Africa's Development (NEPAD) as a programme of the African Union that embodied the vision and commitment of all African Governments and peoples for peace and sustainable development. The Council would reaffirm the need to strengthen, inter alia, in a spirit of partnership, international, regional and subregional cooperation for social development and implementation of the outcome of the World Summit for Social Development and the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly. It would underline the need for effective partnership and cooperation between Governments and the relevant actors of civil society and would urge the international community, the United Nations system and the international financial institutions to ensure that their support for African countries was in accordance with the principles, objectives and priorities of the New Partnership in the new spirit of partnership. The Council would call upon the Secretary-General, in his efforts to harmonize the current initiatives on Africa, to enhance coordination between the United Nations and the specialized agencies, programmes and funds of the United Nations system. Finally, the Council would recommend that the Commission continue to give due prominence to the social dimensions of the New Partnership in its future priority themes.

As part of its consideration of the priority theme, the Commission heard a presentation by the Coordinator of the International Forum for Social Development on the main findings of the second meeting of the Forum which had taken place in October 2002. The subject of the meeting was "Cooperation for social development: the international dimension".

In connection with its review of plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups, the Commission, as the entity responsible for the follow-up to and appraisal of the implementation of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing, 2002, was invited by the General Assembly in its resolution 57/167 of 18 December 2002 to consider integrating the different dimensions of population ageing as contained in the Madrid Plan of Action in its work and to consider the modalities for reviews and appraisals at its current session. The Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft resolution on the modalities for the review and appraisal of the Plan in which the Council, inter alia, would invite Member States and other stakeholders to mainstream ageing in the design and implementation of their policies and programmes; would invite the United Nations system to consider mainstreaming ageing issues in their work plans; and would invite Governments as well as the United Nations system and civil society to participate in a "bottom-up" approach to the review and appraisal of the Plan, through, inter alia, sharing of ideas, data collection and best practices.

The Commission also recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft resolution concerning policies and programmes involving youth in which the Council, inter alia, would reaffirm the crucial importance of the 10 priorities for youth that had been identified in the World Programme of Action for Youth to the Year 2000 and Beyond and also recognize the importance of five issues of concern to young people that were not contained in the Programme of Action; would recommend that the United Nations system continue to provide opportunities for dialogue between Governments and representatives of youth organizations in consultative status with the Council, and that the convening of a future youth forum be based on an intergovernmental decision emanating from the General Assembly; and would invite the Assembly to consider devoting, at its sixtieth session in 2005, two plenary meetings to reviewing the situation of youth and the achievements brought forth in the implementation of the Programme of Action 10 years after its adoption.

With regard to persons with disabilities, the Commission recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a draft resolution in which the Council, inter alia, would request the Commission to continue to contribute to the process established by General Assembly resolution 56/168 on a comprehensive and integral international convention to promote and protect the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities by, inter alia, providing its views regarding social development of persons with disabilities, bearing in mind the experience in the implementation of the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities and the World Programme of Action concerning Disabled Persons; and would invite bodies, organs and entities of the United Nations system as well as non-governmental organizations, national disability and human rights institutions and independent experts with an interest in the matter, to make available to the Ad Hoc Committee on a Comprehensive and Integral International Convention on Protection and Promotion of the Rights and Dignity of Persons with Disabilities suggestions and possible elements to be considered in proposals for a convention.

The Commission recommended to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, the adoption of a draft resolution concerning the preparations for the observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family in 2004, in which the Assembly, inter alia, would encourage Governments to make every possible effort to realize the objectives of the tenth anniversary of the Year and to integrate a family perspective in the planning process; would encourage United Nations agencies and bodies, including the regional commissions, as well as intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, and research and academic institutions, to work closely with the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the United Nations Secretariat in a coordinated manner on family-related issues, including by sharing experiences and findings; and would recall its invitation to the Secretary-General to launch the tenth anniversary of the Year in early December 2003.

The Commission also reviewed the proposed programme of work of the Division for Social Policy and Development of the Department of Economic and Social Affairs for the biennium 2004-2005, and took note of the report of the Board of the United Nations Research Institute for Social Development on the work of the Institute during the period 2001-2002. It nominated, for confirmation by the Economic and Social Council, four candidates for membership in the Board.

In an attempt to link the Commission's normative work with its work in the field, a presentation was made on technical cooperation activities, with the participation of invited experts from Burkina Faso and India and staff of the Division. A dialogue with non-governmental organizations was also held.

Finally, the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council approve the provisional agenda and documentation for its forty-second session in 2004.

5. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session information on the implementation of the present resolution.

3. The Commission for Social Development, recalling General Assembly resolution 57/163 of 18 December 2002, in which the Assembly welcomed the contribution of the Commission to the follow-up and the review of the further implementation of the commitments made at the World Summit for Social Development held in Copenhagen and the further initiatives agreed upon at the twenty-fourth special session of the Assembly, and having considered the priority theme for its forty-first session, entitled "National and international cooperation for social development", takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on national and international cooperation for social development;[19] and recommends to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of the following draft resolution:

Draft resolution V
Agreed conclusions on national and international cooperation for social development*

The Economic and Social Council

Endorses the following agreed conclusions adopted by the Commission for Social Development with respect to its priority theme at its forty-first session:

1. The Commission stresses that national and international cooperation for social development should aim at solidarity, equality within and among countries, social justice, good governance at all levels, tolerance and full respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms.

2. The Commission recognizes that globalization and interdependence are opening new opportunities through trade, investment and capital flows and advances in technology, including information technology, for the growth of the world economy and the development and improvement of living standards around the world. At the same time, there remain serious challenges, including serious financial crises, insecurity, poverty, exclusion and inequality within and among societies. Considerable obstacles to further integration and full participation in the global economy remain for developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as for some countries with economies in transition. Unless the benefits of social and economic development are extended to all countries, a growing number of people in all countries and even entire regions will remain marginalized from the global economy. The Commission reiterates the need for immediate action in order to overcome those obstacles affecting peoples and countries and to realize the full potential of opportunities presented for the benefit of all. The Commission stresses that the social impact and dimension of globalization deserve further attention.

3. Globalization offers opportunities and challenges. The developing countries and countries with economies in transition face special difficulties in responding to those challenges and opportunities. Globalization should be fully inclusive and equitable, and there is a strong need for policies and measures at the national and international levels, formulated and implemented with the full and effective participation of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to help them respond effectively to those challenges and opportunities.

4. In an increasingly globalizing world, renewed and effective partnerships between developed countries and developing countries as well as countries with economies in transition, are required to achieve the internationally agreed social development objectives and commitments, including those adopted at the World Summit for Social Development and the further initiatives adopted at the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly, and the internationally agreed development goals including those contained in the United Nations Millennium Declaration.[20]

5. The Commission welcomes the prominence given to the New Partnership for Africa's Development[21] in the report of the Secretary-General on national and international cooperation for social development[22] as an example of a partnership among Governments. It also recognizes that the objectives and action plans enunciated in the New Partnership are consistent with the internationally agreed development goals including those contained in the Millennium Declaration as well as those spelled out in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development,[23] particularly its commitment seven on accelerating the economic, social and human resource development of Africa and the least developed countries, and the outcome document of the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly.[24]

6. The Commission invites the General Assembly and the Economic and Social Council to continue to include consideration of the integration of economic and social policies as one of the thematic areas to be addressed in future debates.

7. National capacity is one of the key factors in implementing social development policies and fulfilling national responsibilities. Each country has primary responsibility for its own economic and social development and the role of national policies and development strategies cannot be overemphasized. Enhanced international cooperation is essential to implement the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and the Programme of Action of the World Summit for Social Development[25] as well as the further initiatives for social development and to address the challenges of globalization. In this regard, international cooperation has a vital role in assisting developing countries as well as some countries with economies in transition in the strengthening of their human, institutional and technological capacity. Without the building of such capacity, it will be difficult to ensure that social policy concerns are integrated within the policy planning and budgeting processes. The Commission therefore urges the international community to continue to assist developing countries in their capacity-building in order to promote social development.

8. Given the importance of education as a primary and critical component in any development strategy, in particular for the elimination of illiteracy, the Commission emphasizes the relevance of cooperation in educational matters at the national and international levels.

9. Achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration, demands a new partnership between developed and developing countries. In this context, the Commission stresses the importance of the commitment recently made by heads of State and Government to achieving sound policies, good governance at all levels and the rule of law, as well as to mobilizing domestic resources, attracting international flows, promoting international trade as an engine for development, increasing international financial and technical cooperation for development, sustainable debt financing and external debt relief, and enhancing the coherence and consistency of the international monetary, financial and trading systems.

10. The Commission recognizes that a substantial increase in official development assistance and other resources will be required if developing countries are to achieve the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration. To build support for official development assistance, heads of State and Government have pledged to further improve policies and development strategies, both nationally and internationally, to enhance aid effectiveness.

11. In that context, the Commission urges developed countries that have not done so to make concrete efforts towards achieving the target of providing 0.7 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance to developing countries and from 0.15 to 0.20 per cent of their gross national product as official development assistance to least developed countries, as reconfirmed at the Third United Nations Conference on the Least Developed Countries, and encourages developing countries to build on progress achieved in ensuring that official development assistance is used effectively to help achieve development goals and targets. The Commission acknowledges the efforts of all donors, commends those donors whose official development assistance contributions exceed, reach or are increasing towards the targets, and underlines the importance of undertaking an examination of the means and time frames for achieving the targets and goals.

12. Recipient and donor countries, as well as international institutions, should strive to make official development assistance more effective.

13. The Commission underlines the responsibility of the private sector at the national and international levels, including small and large companies and transnational corporations, regarding not only the economic and financial but also the development, social, gender and environmental implications of their activities, their responsibilities towards their workers and their contributions to achieving sustainable development including social development. In this context, the Commission emphasizes the need to take concrete actions within the United Nations system and through the participation of all relevant stakeholders on corporate responsibility and accountability.

14. Partnerships among all relevant actors are increasingly becoming part of national and international cooperation for social development. Within countries, partnerships among the Government, civil society and the private sector can contribute effectively to the achievement of social development goals. At the international level, the recent initiatives towards building voluntary partnerships for social development should be encouraged and discussed further at, inter alia, the intergovernmental level.

15. Cross-sectoral and integrated policies that take into account the needs and interests of all members of society, as well as their contributions to national development, and that mainstream a gender perspective should be promoted.

16. The Commission calls upon all relevant development partners to give adequate attention to productive and sustainable employment, as appropriate, in their development policies. Employment strategies can have a substantial impact on poverty eradication, social development and gender equality and should be developed in harmony with economic growth strategies and structural reforms. The Commission sees the involvement of social partners in cooperating with Governments in the formulation and implementation of employment strategies as an important element in ensuring their success. The Commission stresses the need to design appropriate labour and employment policies that will support both growth with employment and employment that supports social development goals.

17. Fulfilment of sustainable development objectives should aim at ensuring, inter alia, quality employment and defending workers rights and interests and, to this effect, the Commission notes the need to promote respect for the relevant United Nations and International Labour Organization conventions.

18. The Commission encourages the strengthening of cooperation among countries, inter alia, to address the issues of labour-market information and skills standards certification as well as transnational issues on labour migration, with a view to protecting the rights and dignity of migrant workers.

19. The Commission stresses the necessity of ensuring the effective involvement of developing countries in the international economic decision-making process through, inter alia, greater participation in international economic forums, thereby ensuring the transparency and accountability of international financial institutions with respect to according a central position for social development in their policies and programmes.

20. The Commission notes the increasing operational coordination and cooperation achieved between the United Nations funds and programmes and the international financial institutions, while taking into account their respective competences and mandates. In this context, the Commission invites the international financial institutions to strengthen further their efforts to ensure that an improved social outcome is incorporated into their programmes of assistance, taking into account the fact that poverty reduction strategies should be nationally owned. Where Poverty Reduction Strategy Papers exist, a broad platform is necessary to place them within a wider context where all social objectives would be adequately taken into account.
